

The Lowdown in Lobsterville

VOLULME ELEVEN

AUGUST 2005

WHERE HAVE WE BEEN

For those of you wondering where we have been and where the Second July issue went – the answer is easy. We have been slacking. That is the beauty of not getting paid – we don't have to work either. We warned you that this was a fly-by-the-seat-of-your-pants publication!!!!

CRANK CALLS UPDATE

There has been a lull in the number of crank calls local residents have been receiving. Is the perpetrator worried and has (s)he finally come to his/her senses? An inside source tells us that things have been quiet in Washington, D.C. Is the wave over or is it just time to regroup? We shall continue to advise as developments occur.

CLAWS AND TAILS

What a fun and educational time was had by all who took the surfing classes. We here at The Lowdown did not know how truly talented our own Johnny Big Claw was. We learned (some of us better than others) the "Belly Sail", the "Claw Crawl", and for those of us who really wanted a challenge, JBC demonstrated his famous "Tail Walk". Thank you, Johnny Big Claw, for sharing your talents with your neighbors.

Labor Day doth quickly approach. Are you ready for the picnic? Remember, in the Lobsterville tradition, the Labor Day picnic is entirely cold fair. No BBQs or hot dishes (food dishes, that is) allowed. So whip up your best salads and sandwiches and see you Lobster Sands. We start the games at 10:00 a.m. Monday morning.

The results are in as to who is responsible for the faux pas at the Father's Day Celebration. For those of you who may have forgotten, the incoming tide washed away all the castles before any pictures could be taken. Who was in charge of the scheduling and was supposed to have checked the tide tables – none other than Lucky Lobster. So, who put a gambler in charge of this important task? The answer to that question is – our mayor candidate, Louie Lobster. Seems he is not too bright. Do we really want this guy as our mayor? Tis a question that we may all want to consider.

There will be pet obedience classes held at Lobster Sands each Sunday through the month of September. Bring your pet crab, crawdad or starfish and have them learn how to obey your every whim. You can bring your pet clam if you so desire but have you ever tried to teach a clam to "come" or "heel". A rather daunting task when you consider that clams don't have legs. On the other claw, they are rather adept at the "sit" and "stay" commands.

Thus ended the regular season of Beach Volley Ball. The playoffs were quite exciting. Here are the results of those games for you crustaceans who missed the action:

Sunday, July 17th, 2005

The Xsters (25) v. The Klaws (23)
The Hopefuls (27) v. The Skippers (25)

Sunday, July 24th, 2005 – For Third Place

The Skippers (21) v. The Klaws (18)

Sunday, July 31st, 2005 – For First and Second Place

The Hopefuls (29) v. The Xsters (27)

So as you can see, the final results were

First Place - The Hopefuls
Second Place - The Xsters
Third Place - The Skippers

Our congratulations to all teams – it was truly a great season. And what made the season even better, was the annual celebration. There was plenty of food and lots of tall tales – if you missed it, you are such a loser.

ARE YOU READY FOR AUTUMN?
