

The Lowdown in Lobsterville

VOLULME TWELVE

NOVEMBER 2005

WE ARE BACK

Once again, we have been absent for a couple of months. Other projects have been time consuming. We have, most recently, started and are still working on remodeling the office here at The Lowdown and, since the job as publisher of this rag does not pay the bills, we must undertake more lucrative projects. All excuses put aside, our public has been demanding more reliable news and we shall try to accommodate them.

THE RESULTS ARE IN

November 4th, the day of the election here in Lobsterville (we don't care if it is different than the rest of the country - we walk to the beat of our own drummer) has come and gone and the results are in. For those of you who have had your tail buried in the sand and do not the results yet, here they are: Mayor - Louie Lobster; Librarian - Lucy Lobster; Garbage Collector - Dexter Lobster; and Party Planner - we had a tie so there will be two party planners - Fast Frieda and Party Pete.

A couple of words of explanation shall be inserted here. First, regarding the race for mayor. Linus Lobster - our other candidate - ended up in jail. Remember all the crank phone calls and the insinuations from the dark, seedy bar in Washington, D.C., well, Linus was at the root of all evil and is now cooling his heels in a local county jail awaiting trial. Read more about this adventure in our next issue where we will have a special expose on the doings of our colorful mayor candidate.

It seems that our town is not ready for a foreign librarian and candidate Lisette Lobster was soundly defeated. And since Frank Lobster's much awaited secret sauce for marinating cod fillets did not (and has not) reached the market yet, I think that a lot of locals voted against him as being unreliable.

And finally, what could be better than one party planner - two. And two we have. Fast Frieda and Party Pete tied in a fun filled campaign and plan to work together to entertain the residents of Lobsterville in ways that cannot be imagined. This promises to be a fun-filled season.

THANKSGIVING DINNER

A special Thanksgiving dinner will be held at the Crustacean Palace on Friday, November 25th. We are holding it on the day after Thanksgiving so that you can each spend Thanksgiving day with your families. However, the dinner on Friday will be a special Thanksgiving dinner in that anyone who attends it has obviously made it through another year without being trapped and, as Lobsters, that is a lot to be thankful for. It will be buffet style so bring your favorite dish (and food - ha, ha, I crack me up) and come enjoy a good time together.

CLAWS AND TAILS

Our pumpkin carving contest was canceled this year. If you recall, last years contest ended in a rather disgruntled Johnny Big Claw creating havoc in Lobsterville so we decided it was better to take a year off and let everyone calm down. We are, however, holding our local Christmas Tree Trimming contest. The contestants are hard at work and we plan on featuring the winners in our December issue. So far the leaders seem to be the talented team of Lucienne and Lorree Lobster but anything can change as the final touches are put on the magnificent trees.

A special thank you goes out to all the Veterans in Lobsterville and all places other. Without you, we would not be free to do and enjoy the things that we can today. So don't forget to hug your Vet (and not the kind that you take your pet crab to)

We had a very successful graduation from our pet obedience classes that were held through the month of September. And for the pets that were just too lazy or stupid to learn, they were part of a very tasty barbeque after the graduation ceremony. Thanx to all who attended.

And in the "you just needed to know" category, one of our non-crustacean supports, a favorite electrical engineer, is molting and will shortly have a larger shell to live in. Congratulations to him.

HAPPY THANKSGIVING
